W. H. Ingalls, of Green county, New York, takes a philosophical view of farming. He is a correspondent of the Rural New Yorker, and thus addresses himself to that journal: My December and averaged about two weeks aga when eggs went down. Then my pontary, thinking it did not pay for the wear and tear, dropped suddenly to three or lour eggs a day. They have now recommenced laying abundantly and I shall consequently expect to see the egg coarket improve. I teed bin kwheat, outs, containd claim shells, all they want, and plenty of clean water.

I keep ten cows, they have made two hundred pounds of butter since the first of December, are looking will and are coming in in March. I feed twice a day, once in the yard and once in the stable. I like to have my cows run out in the day-time, unless stormy or very windy. I think cattle are stronger if wintered in this way. 1 feed corn-stalks and two quarts of Indian meal and buckwheat bran mixed, mornings; and at night, all the lay they will cat and the same feed of grain. I have farmed thirteen years and never had sick cow in the spring. My logs get all surplus milk and I timk do much better than if feil on char grain.

I have seven hundred fruit trees, and to protect them from the mice in found so effectual or desirable, the winter, my little boy goes whead with a pick and luse is the grunnil, of Massachusetts, says, "The conand then I follow with a line and clear stituents are pure, and carefully sefrom around the tree everything where lected for excellent quality; and I in mice can harber, and pile around consider it the BEST PREPARATION each tree a little mound of clear dirt for its intended purposes." about three inches high. Moreover, I take a wire and sharp knile ulong with me and clean out every grub. This work I do about the middle of September, and I am never troubbed with either mice or grahs. My trees have been set from two to ten years, relied on to change the color of the and in that time I have lost only one tree through the ravages of mice.

This, of course, requires some labor; get something from nothing. A little labor laid out at the right time, saves which will neither rub nor wash off. a good deal of money and trauble. I hate to lie awake at night and think that mice and grubs are undoing what I have tried to accomplish.

Now, just one word for the birds I think they are my greatest friends. Nothing makes my children more lunpy than the return of these feathered wanderers. They are harlingers of the summer days, and they follow me as I turn the furrow, and clean my land as well as the trees of all the pests they can get at. I have never been in the law business, but if I should see anybody on my premises shooting birds, I think I should give him a do-e of Blackstone. I am happy in farming and think all farmers would be so, in they worked more and grumbled
